A torn Hart can only be mended by the right woman. Fired from her dream job, Lydia Sullivan loses hope. How else do you drown your sorrows than in a cheap bottle of rum? Seems like a good plan until she runs smack into the hard chest of her dreamy neighbor Rex. Despite her not-so-adorable drunkenness, they strike up a friendship that quickly turns into more. But just when Lydia's life is starting to look up-she's got the job, the great guy with deep dimples, and the sun is shining-weird things begin to happen that make her question whether she's losing her mind ... or someone is out to get her. Retired special operative and now security specialist Rex Hart normally falls in love with a new woman every night, but not this time. His neighbor with the hazel eyes and thin filter has him under her spell. He'd like to think she's the one, but the way she's acting has him torn between his heart and his head. He wants to believe she's innocent, but instinct has him questioning everything-including his feelings. Is Lydia who she claims to be? Is she the one ... or the one he needs to turn loose?
