A Passage to India begins and ends by posing the question of whether it is possible for an Englishman and an Indian to ever be friends, at least within the context of British colonialism. As Forster describes his characters' inner lives and their interactions with each other, the subject of friendship becomes very important, as it is shown as the most powerful connection between two individuals apart from romantic love. THE BLACK CAT phantasm of the cat; and, during this period, there came back into my spirit a half-sentiment that seemed, but was not, remorse. Forster uses this question as a framework "A Passage to India" is divided into three parts—mosque, caves, and temple—to focus on different groups of people, seasons, and behaviors.
