Gluten-free baker Poppy McAllister and her aunt Ginny are looking forward to a quiet, homey Christmas at their Bt taking a holiday this year . . . Ever since Thanksgiving, when an engagement ring in a velvet box and no gift tag was left behind, Poppy and her pals have been left with an unsolved mystery. But at least this mystery isn't the kind that involves murder. That all changes when the body of a fish supplier is discovered in the kitchen of her exs restaurant and hes frozen, not fresh. For once, its not Poppy who tripped over the corpse, yet she cant escape being drawn in since the victim has a note taped to him reading Get Poppy. Figures an engagement ring isn't labeled, but the dead guy is addressed to her. Now, while Aunt Ginny plans a tree-trimming party and pressures Poppy to decode a mysterious old diary, the amateur sleuth is asked to unofficially go undercover at the restaurant to help the police. Until then, the only crime Poppy had been dealing with was the cat Figaros repeated thefts of bird ornaments from the tree; now it looks like its going to be a murder-y Christmas after all . . .
