The plot revolves around a female artist's struggles against the Venetian city-state in the aftermath of the 16th century Battle of Lepanto. Art is opinion, and opinion is the source of all authority. Scenes from an Execution is a play by the English playwright Howard Barker. Although the city commissions the painting to celebrate the victory over the Turks, the artist's vision differs dramatically. Howard Barker's Scenes from an Execution makes sixteenth-century Venice the setting for a fearless exploration of sexual politics and the timeless tension between personal ambition and moral responsibility, between the patron's demands and the artist's autonomy. But the play has extraordinary relevance for today's audience, says director Jim Petosa. Missing: pdf. Scenes from an Execution is a play by the English playwright Howard Barker.
