Mere survival is not enough. In the midst of utter destruction, you can start to build something new. Coolness under fire is largely a function of experience in combat, and affects how well a character functions in the stress of a life-threatening situation. The premise is that the United States/NATO and the Soviet Union/Warsaw Pact have fought a lengthy conventional war, followed by a (limited) nuclear war with all its consequences. To determine coolness, divide the time in combat by and drop fractions. Roll D6 and add the result to the total obtained. Now subtract the total from Fantasy Flight Games Yet, in this very bleak world, there is still hope. Characters in the game are survivors of the war. Twilight is a roleplaying game about survival in mankind's most desperate hour.
