"An auspicious initial science fiction saga of epic dimensions and vast intergalactic scale which chronicles the struggles of JT Wayne as he endeavors to cope with injuries, heart break, and loss. Rife with riveting characterization of exotic species and galaxy spanning civilizations. A captivating, taut military campaign allegory wrapped in political commentary with faint science fantasy elements. A thought provokingly relatable everyman whose access point illuminates wider questions about the nature of being and meaning. A genuinely heart felt five-star score." - Ronald B. Kline, Jr. Author of Strange Visions Lerner Publishing Group, Inc. Meet Sergeant John Thomas (JT): the sole survivor of a devastating battle and mankind's only hope for possibly defeating the Gnoracs, a race of alien aggressors, in the 4th Great Inter-Stellar War. Will JT be able to make the peace his superiors strive for a reality? Along the way he meets a host of characters, some shadier than others. He also encounters a young part alien doctor who may hold the key to his heart. JT wants to get back home to visit his surviving family. But that goal is lofty. With a myriad of species and alien races from across the universe, JT finds himself in a race against time. His mind conflicts with his better judgement advising him not to follow his emotional instincts. This is because he is a Federal Marine sworn to duty first. However, when his healer who is also his protector seems to care more for him than is professionally acceptable, what can he do but react humanely? After all, JT is a human first and only after that is he a Marine. Will he survive to become the savior of the Federation and its allies? Will he find love? Will the Gnoracs be defeated saving humanity and Cybrinthian-kind? Read The Last Flight Home to find out.
