When it was first published in, The Age of Anxiety –W. H. Auden’s last, longest, and most ambitious book-length poem– immediately struck a powerful chord, capturing the imagination of the cultural moment that it diagnosed and named. TLDR. Psychology. Beginning as a conversation among four strangers in a barroom on New York It was Auden who characterized this as “the age of anxiety.” His poem by that title, wrote Monroe K. Spears in his Poetry of W.H. Auden, was a “sympathetic satire on the attempts of human beings to escape, through their own efforts, the anxiety of our age.” Auden struck a chord in readers with his timely treatment of the moral From “The Age of Anxiety” by W. H. Auden For the others, like me, there is only the flash Of negative knowledge, the night when, drunk, one Staggered to the bathroom and stares in the glass To meet one’s madness, when what mother said seems Such darling rubbish and the ent advice Of the liberal weeklies as lost an art Betsy Schwarm.
