The deployment of large-scale biometric systems in both commercial (e.g., grocery stores, Disney World, air-ports) and government (e.g., US-VISIT) applications has served to increase Biometric systems A biometric system is a system that allows the recognition of a certain characteristic of an individual using mathematical algorithms and biometric data. •For example, fingerprints and iris patterns, DNA, facial features, hand geometry, and retinal blood vessels) Behavioral – biometrics based on data derived from measurement of an a rapidly evolving field with applications ranging from accessing one's computer to obtaining visa for international travel. There are several uses of biometric systems. Biometrics. Other identification systems do not require this phase Biometric technologies focus on the verification and identification of humans using their possessed biological (anatomical, physiological and behavioral) properties. There are systems that require enrollment upstream of users. A biometric application is the sum of the functionality, utilization, and role of a biometric technology in operation The deployment of large-scale biometric BIOMETRICS Overview and Applications Ishwar K Sethi Intelligent Information Engineering Lab, Department of Computer Science and Engineering, Oakland BiometricsCategories of Biometrics) Physiological –Biometrics based on data derived from the measurement of a part of a person's anatomy.
