Introduction

Nowadays, more and more users are familiar with cryptocurrencies and transactions using cryptocurrencies. On the other hand, with the innovation of Blockchain technology, cryptocurrencies are gradually recognized. In some countries, people have also begun to build a legal framework to accept cryptocurrencies as assets with transaction value. Very early, just a few years after the invention of Blockchain (2008), some famous companies in North America accepted Bitcoin for their goods purchase transactions.

Now, let's examine some descriptions of how payment gateways work, which allow users to use cryptocurrencies to pay for goods on some platforms.

When you have cryptocurrencies and want to use them to buy goods, how will you do it? First and foremost, the store you are visiting has or does not have the function to allow buyers to pay with cryptocurrencies. Now, let's figure out how crypto payment gateway works!

Like regular payment gateways, a cryptocurrency payment gateway performs the payment function first. However, it will create an additional method of accepting cryptocurrency payments and allow buyers to choose the currency they have available to make payments and complete transactions. A cryptocurrency payment gateway is seen as a bridge between buyers, sellers, and blockchain technology without going through any intermediary steps.
