Neither of them were looking for love, but it found them anyway...Charlotte Wells needs a drastic change in her life. Her editor is looking for something new, something fresh. Something romantic. And Charlotte-well, Charlotte hates love. She can't say no to the deal from the publisher, so she heads to Orchid City for a change of scenery. What she doesn't intend on, is finding inspiration in the hot hockey player she stumbles into. Weston Cole doesn't do relationships, he doesn't do commitments. But when he meets Charlotte, she ignites something inside of him. Probably just lust, because Wes doesn't do anything more than a quick fling. Either way, he's looking for a good time and he has a proposition for her. He wants to be her source of inspiration, if she agrees to being his temporary distraction. It's the perfect situation and something they can both agree on. No attachments and definitely no feelings. The only problem? They're only lying to themselves.
