The first Surrealist manifesto was written by Breton and published in 1924. From the beginning of the surrealist movement, Andre Breton pondered the relationship between surrealism and what became known as art brut after the invention of the term MANIFESTO OF SURREALISM. His writings include the first Surrealist Manifesto (Manifeste du surréalisme) of 1924, in which he defined surrealism as "pure psychic automatism". Surrealism deliberately invites not only the outrage of the bourgeois but dares him to pull down the tent, and smash the mirrors that made the model appear to be sawn in half.
