Intuition is considered to be one of the least defined and operationalized elements of human capital (Fields,). For example, David Lewis writes, Our “intuitions” are simply opinions; our philosophical theories are the same. Some are commonsensical, some are sophisticated; some are particular, some general; some are more firmly held, some less part ii. Specifically, we suggest This paper pioneers the use of methods and findings from psycholinguistics in experimental philosophy’s ‘sources project’. Begson is aware of the Intuition, at least as it relates to ision-making, can be defined as affectively charged judgments that arise through rapid, nonconscious, and holistic association (Dane and Pratt,, p) Some philosophers equate intuitions with beliefs or with some kind of belief. intuition.
