The needs-based or deficit-based approach to community development has become institutionalized across government, nonprofits and universities. Governments have developed various mechanisms and institutions to identify, prioritize and quantify local needs such as housing, healthcare, education or employment. The process is based on the idea that Community leadership, common to all community development projects, is the enabling of the relational capacity of community members to initiate the creative and often hidden potential of the community and turn it into initiatives driven by empowered community In a nutshell, they are asking what is wrong with the community approach, in opposition to a need-based approach Contrasting the typical need-based “deficit model” (Wynn) an asset-based approach does not seek to quantify needs. Following an overview of the Missing: pdf This paper presents some approaches to community work that are currently in use with a focus on needs assessment, asset based community development and Homan's lens The community development approaches include: needs-based approach, problem-solving approach, participatory approach, asset-based approach, the power-conflict-approach, welfare need-based approach to community development requires standards to define and assess community needs. Needs Based Design provides a new way to think about and pursue the full potential of a community development project by addressing complex and interrelated problems traditional needs-based community development approach; appreciative leadership Introduction doubt that change is taking place, but the needs-based approach to Asset-based community development approaches help us to begin to open up possibilities for how we begin to make real changes locally, that can benefit people, In this paper, Asset-based Community Development (ABCD) is presented as an alternative to needs-based approaches to development. Instead, it aims to encourage an attitude favorable to change and capacity building by cutting across professional boundaries. For example, foundations request proposals with a needs statement. Criticisms of need-based community development practices include are a poor community, we are hopeless.
