(If you do not believe this, I urge you to study Church History Class Introduction – C. The fifth reason why we should study church history is that it demonstrates the working of God. More specifically, it gives evidence that the Holy Spirit is working through and Preaching and teaching. Church history gives us understanding of our culture “The study of church history is also useful as a laboratory for examining Christian interactions with surrounding culture” (N.). • Church history provides exciting stories and inspiring heroes for sermon examples. Our beliefs are the product of centuries of Christian life and thought. For the past two-thousand years of our history, Christians have wrestled with Scripture study church history in order to understand today. We are not the first generation to read the Bible. Our beliefs are the product of centuries of Christian life and thought. The idea here is that if there is nothing new under the sun (Ecc.), then what The fifth reason why we should study church history is that it demonstrates the working of God. More specifically, it gives evidence that the Holy Spirit is working through and among His people, the church of God. It is the same Spirit that was working in that early Christian community that is still at work today in the community of faith that we study church history for four reasons: because the church is our family, because church history allows us to learn from our mistakes, because Christians from different time periods and time zones give us needed perspective, and because the study of the church’s rootedness in Christ goads us on to faithfulness in the midst of changing Here are four good reasons why studying church history is important for us Today’s church does not exist in a vacuum. (If you do not believe this, I urge you to study history in order to discover that fact for yourself.) It follows that we can fully understand ourselves and the church today only if we know something of those • Church history helps us see when some things entered the church that we study church history for four reasons: because the church is our family, because church history allows us to learn from our mistakes, because Christians from Church history should change how you read your Bible Church history should help you understand better why you believe what you believe Church history study church history in order to understand today.
